INSTAGRAM TO TEST NEW SHOPPING FEATURE

1 Facebook's Instagram said it will start tests next week on a shopping feature through which users can buy products from U.S.-based retailers via the photo-sharing app. Retailers will be able to showcase as many as five products in an Instagram post, and clicking on the various tags will give users more detail about the product than was previously available. Instagram has also added a "shop now" link on each product, which, when clicked, will redirect users to the retailer's website, where they can buy the product. The features are aimed at keeping Instagram users on the app for longer during their shopping experience than before, when they would have to exit the app to research and buy products. Instagram said it has signed up 20 U.S.-based retailers, including accessories and apparel retailer Kate Spade, menswear ecommerce company JackThreads and eye-wear maker Warby Parker. The feature will be available to select users of Apple's iOS-based devices within the United States from next week, Instagram said. REUTERS

US OFFICIALS SAY N.KOREA PREPARING MISSILE LAUNCH

2 North Korea is preparing to launch an intermediate-range ballistic missile in the next three days, Fox Business Network reported Tuesday, citing two unidentified U.S. officials. The Communist nation planned the launch for between 24 and 72 hours, the cable network reported. It would be the latest in a series of launches by the isolated country this year in violation of U.N. Security Council resolutions, supported by China, that ban all ballistic missile-related activities by the North. North Korea, which is under U.N. and other international sanctions for its nuclear and missile programs, has conducted repeated missile tests this year, the most recent Oct. 20. REUTERS

CHINA CRITICIZES TRUMP PLAN TO EXIT CLIMATE CHANGE PACT

3 China on Tuesday rejected a plan by U.S. Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump to back out of a global climate-change pact, saying a wise political leader should make policy in line with global trends, a rare comment on a foreign election. The world is moving toward balancing environmental protection and economic growth, China's top climate-change negotiator told reporters, in response to a query on how China would work with a Trump administration on climate change. "If they resist this trend, I don't think they'll win the support of their people, and their country's economic and social progress will also be affected," Xie Zhenhua said. Trump has threatened to reject the Paris Agreement, a global accord that takes effect Friday. It was negotiated by nearly 200 governments to battle climate change. REUTERS

Commuters survive Day 1 of SEPTA strike

The strike by TWU Local 234 threw Philadelphians' lives into disarray.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

Philadelphians who rely on SEPTA for their day-to-day mobility tried to make the best of it Monday without public transit.

Many were able to weather the strike. However, strikers created rush-hour mayhem Tuesday by cuting off the only rail option still available to commuters.

SEPTA obtained an injunction later in the day that will allow Regional Rail crews and engineers to return to work.

Commuters are really hoping they won't have to cope with another day of inconvenience.

"I couldn't take my son to day care and I couldn't get to work," complained Iisha Rosser, 23, of North Philly, who relies on three separate SEPTA lines for her 90-minute commute. "That actually put me in a bad place."

Rosser said she's trying to look at the strike as a holiday to spend extra time with her 18-month-old son. But she doesn't want to have to tell her employer that she's not showing up a second day.

"They were a little upset, but they know my situation," she said.

One distinguished-looking man with a briefcase and a porkpie hat trudging along slowly said he was walking back home from work. "At least it's a beautiful day," he said. "I just hope they're not on strike again tomorrow."

Another man complained that his wife had to walk more than an hour to work.

"I can't believe, can't imagine, so many people can't get to their job," said Joyce Burd, 69, a Fairmount resident.

"My concern is that it's not going to be resolved by Election Day, and I'm hoping and praying it will be," she added. "It will really affect turnout, and we need Hillary to carry the state."

"A lotta people are gonna lose their jobs over this s—t, man!" complained one North Philly resident on Girard Avenue who asked not to be identified. "They shut the whole city down when they go on strike!

"A lot of people waiting out here for the trolley don't even know," he fumed. "They can't afford hacks [unlicensed taxis]. … They made some people get off the buses at midnight when they went on strike. Can you imagine, people being stuck downtown, having to walk miles home?"

> "I couldn't take my son to day care and I couldn't get to work."
> Iisha Rosser

TWU Local 234 represents about 5,000 SEPTA bus drivers, subway and trolley operators, mechanics and maintenance workers in Philadelphia and its suburbs.

They went on strike at midnight Nov. 1 as their contract expired. Regional Rail is not affected by the strike.

SEPTA officials said they are continuing efforts to negotiate a new contract.

Below, see an informational bulletin released by the city's ReadyPhiladelphia notification program after the strike took effect.

As of 12:01 a.m. Tuesday morning November 1, the Transport Workers Union (TWU) Local 234 City Transit Division is on strike.

This means that SEPTA City bus, trolley, trackless trolley, Market Frankford Line, and Broad Street Line/Broad Ridge Spur Line services are suspended.

Customized Community Transportation (CCT)/Paratransit, and the LUCY Loop will continue to operate.

Visit SEPTA's Service Interruption Guide for more information regarding service interruption.

Despite SEPTA strike, Metro still hits the stands

Metro Philadelphia will continue its distribution throughout the city and near transit stops amid the strike by SEPTA union workers that began early Tuesday morning.

"All locations will still be serviced during the strike," Metro U.S. Circulation Director Joseph Lauletta said, adding that certain locations, especially along the PATCO rail line connecting Philadelphia and New Jersey, will see a higher volume of papers each day.

While Metro is frequently found at SEPTA stations, Lauletta said almost all newspaper boxes and racks are above ground, and therefore are not affected by the strike.

SEPTA closed all stations for the Broad Street and Market-Frankford lines. The one exception is Suburban Station at 16th Street and John F. Kennedy Boulevard, where Lauletta said Metro keeps a newspaper box inside the station. However, since the Regional Rail has not been affected by the strike, daily issues will still be available.

Lauletta said Metro Philadelphia owns 1,002 newspaper boxes and racks in the region, and 753 within Philadelphia County.

As always, issues of Metro Philadelphia are free.

For those whose commutes no longer include traveling via SEPTA for the duration of the strike, Metro Philadelphia's content is also available online at Metro.us/philadelphia, where readers can also sign up for the daily newsletter. Parking rates modified during SEPTA strike

No street parking is permitted on Broad, but the agency eased rules around the city.

ALEXIS SACHDEV

alexis.sachdev@metro.us

In an effort to ease commuters' woes during a SEPTA union strike that went into effect Tuesday morning, the Philadelphia Parking Authority has modified its rates for several Center City and Old City parking garages.

Five off-street garages and lots will offer a flat rate of $10 for 10 hours of parking, starting Tuesday morning and continuing through the end of the strike:

- Autopark at Market Street (entrance on 10th Street between Filbert and Arch)
- Parkade on Eighth Street (with entrances between Arch and Filbert on Eighth, and on Arch on either side of Eighth)
- Autopark at Jefferson (entrance between Market and Chestnut streets)
- Autopark at Independence Mall (entrances on Fifth and Sixth streets between Market and Arch); and
- Autopark at Old City (entrances on Front and Second between Walnut and Chestnut)

On-street parking is not permitted on Broad Street, from Spring Garden to South streets on both sides. However, the PPA said expired meters or kiosk receipts will not be ticketed for one hour after the expiration for the duration of the strike.

Parking areas that are normally limited or closed will also be permitted without limitation for the duration of the strike (a full list can be found here) but regular parking violations will still be enforced, like parking in front of a fire hydrant.

Angry SEPTA strikers block Regional Rail

SEPTA workers striking for a better contract created rush-hour mayhem Tuesday by cuting off a rail option still available to commuters.

The strike by members of TWU Local 234 didn't affect the Regional Rail service that transports thousands of commuters between Philadelphia and surrounding suburbs. Those employees are represented by a different union.

But striking workers began picketing at Wayne Junction at about 4:15 p.m. and blocked Regional Rail employees from entering and getting to work.

As of rush hour around 5 p.m., thousands of commuters were stranded in Suburban Station.

Meanwhile, TWU Local 234 said that negotiations had not proceeded at all on Tuesday.

By 6 p.m., SEPTA obtained an injunction that will allow Regional Rail crews and engineers to return to work, they said. SAM NEWHOUSE

Eagles receiver Josh Huff pulled over with gun, weed, sources say

Huff is the third Eagles wideout facing legal issues.

The Eagles' wide receiver woes continue to get worse.

Wide receiver and kick returner Josh Huff, who has been gaining favor as a key contributor in recent weeks, was pulled over for allegedly speeding at 63 mph on the Walt Whitman Bridge, which has a 45 mph speed limit, according to several sources.

He had a gun and weed in his possession, police said.

Huff is charged with unlawful possession of a firearm and possession of less than 50 grams of marijuana, CSNPhilly.com reported. He is said to have a permit to carry the firearm only in Texas.

The 25-year-old, drafted by Chip Kelly a few seasons ago, is Philly's fourth wide receiver and had a 98-yard kickoff return for a touchdown this year.

"We are aware of the incident today involving Josh Huff," the Eagles said in a news release. "At this point, we are gathering more information."

Huff is the third Eagles wideout to have legal troubles. During the offseason, Nelson Agholor was investigated for an incident with a woman at a Philly night club. Dorial Green-Beckham also had off-the-field problems during his time in Tennessee before signing with Philadelphia.

In addition, linebacker Nigel Bradham had his own legal problems twice this season and offseason resulting from incidents in Miami.

Airbnb tells China users personal data to be stored locally

In accordance with country's laws and regulations.

U.S. short-term rental company Airbnb has told Chinese users it will store their personal data locally as foreign tech companies operating in China respond to increasing regulatory pressure.

The firm said in an email sent to Chinese users Tuesday that personal data will be "transferred to, stored, used and processed by Airbnb China … in accordance with Chinese laws and regulations."

The comments follow a blog post last week in which Airbnb announced the launch of a separate Chinese entity that will oversee the management of local data from next month.

Along with the launch of the Chinese entity, Airbnb announced a series of agreements with local city authorities, including Shenzhen, Chongqing, Shanghai and Guangzhou.

China has exerted increasing pressure on foreign tech companies operating within the country over the past year.

On Monday, the country's parliament held a second reading of a draft cybersecurity law that could require foreign technology firms to store certain "important business data" locally, including personal data.

Airbnb is not the only company to proactively move user data to local servers. Consumer electronics giant Apple began using servers provided by China Telecom Corp. on Chinese soil in August 2014.

Airbnb saw a fivefold increase in outbound Chinese customers in 2015, making it one of the company's fastest-growing such markets.

Airbnb is facing a handful of highly-funded rivals in the local Chinese market, including Tujia.com, which raised $300 million in August 2015, valuing the home-rental site at more than $1 billion.

Xiaozhu.com, often dubbed China's Airbnb clone, also raised fresh funding in the third quarter of 2015, taking in $60 million at a valuation of over $300 million.

That is small compared with the fundraising for Airbnb in September that give it a valuation of $30 billion.

Chinese short-term rental services also include value-added services, including Tujia's cleaning services for high-end listings.

Xiaozhu offers a service where users can have a staff member visit individual houses and offer tips for improving listings. REUTERS

Hulu signs deals with Disney, Fox for new streaming TV service

Video website Hulu on Tuesday announced deals to add programing from Twenty-First Century Fox and Walt Disney Co. to a streaming TV service that it plans to offer in early 2017.

Disney and Fox, as well as Comcast Corp. and Time Warner Inc., own stakes in Hulu.

Hulu's live and on-demand streaming video service will include Fox's entertainment, news, sports and nonfiction content, along with video from Disney's channels including ABC and ESPN, it said in a statement.

Time Warner said in August it would pay $583 million to buy a 10 percent stake in Hulu and that its Turner networks, including TBS, Cartoon Network and Turner Classic Movies, would be available on the new service.

ISTOCK

"With these two new deals in place, and additional partners to come, Hulu will soon give TV fans of all ages live and on-demand access to their favorite programs in a whole new, more flexible, highly personalized way," Hulu Chief Executive Officer Mike Hopkins said in the company's statement.

Hulu's customers watch shows on demand for $8 per month with commercials or $12 without them. The company has beefed up its customer service staff and has been hiring executives from outside and within to slow subscriber defections ahead of the introduction of its live-TV service. REUTERS

Ryan hits Clinton 'scandal baggage'

Speaker focusing on keeping control of Congress Nov. 8.

A Hillary Clinton presidency would bog down in "scandal baggage," House of Representatives Speaker Paul Ryan said on Tuesday, adding he was focused on defending Republican majorities in Congress in the Nov. 8 election.

Republicans have hammered the Democratic candidate as scandal-prone since FBI Director James Comey revived questions about her handling of emails while she was secretary of state. They have reasserted threats to investigate Clinton from her first day in office if she is elected.

"This is what life with the Clintons looks like. It's always a scandal, one after another, then there's an investigation," Ryan, the most senior elected Republican in the country, told Fox News in an interview. "You never know what's coming next."

"She will come in just like [President] Barack Obama did, but with her scandal baggage. I don't think that's what the American people want to see," Ryan said.

Opinion polls show Clinton maintaining her lead over Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump, although her advantage has narrowed slightly since early last week. The effect of Comey's news on voters' support is not yet clear.

Comey said on Friday the Federal Bureau of Investigation was looking into new emails that might pertain to a previously completed investigation into Clinton's use of a private server while she was secretary of state.

Trump and other Republicans have seized on the announcement, which indicated no wrongdoing on Clinton's part, to cast doubt on Clinton's integrity, hoping the news will damage not just Clinton but Democrats' chances of regaining control of one or both chambers of Congress.

> "It's always a scandal, one after another ..."
> Paul Ryan

Ryan maintained the arms-length posture toward Trump that he adopted after a 2005 video emerged last month in which the New York businessman was heard boasting about groping women.

Ryan said he had voted for Trump in early voting last week, but that his position had not changed and that he had no plans to campaign with his party's nominee, instead focusing on maintaining Republicans' control of the House.

"My focus personally right now is saving our House majority. I'm going to Indiana, Michigan, New York and Virginia today to fight for House Republicans," he told Fox.

While Republicans appear poised to keep control of the House, the race for the Senate remains evenly matched, according to an average of polls by RealClearPolitics.

Some conservative members of the Republican caucus in the House, unhappy with Ryan's treatment of Trump and his handling of other issues on Capitol Hill, have questioned whether he should continue as speaker after the election.

"We're all focused on beating Democrats on Nov. 8. All the rest of this stuff will sort itself out," Ryan told Fox. "I'm very confident where I stand with our members."

Republican Sen. John Cornyn on Tuesday called for Attorney General Loretta Lynch, an Obama appointee, to intervene over the Clinton email probe. "AG Lynch has authority to unravel Clinton email mess by appointing a special counsel who can convene an impartial grand jury," Cornyn wrote on Twitter.

Such a move would all but guarantee that controversy over Clinton's email would simmer into 2017 and perhaps beyond, and potentially tie up her agenda if she were elected to the White House.

House Oversight Committee Chairman Jason Chaffetz told The Washington Post last week he has years' worth of potential material that could be used to investigate Clinton. REUTERS

Clinton camp: FBI must say what it knows about Trump's Russia ties

Announcement of more Clinton emails gives Trump slight bump in new poll Tuesday.

A top aide to Hillary Clinton on Tuesday urged the FBI to disclose what it knows about any ties between Republican Donald Trump and Russia, accusing the law enforcement agency of unfairly publicizing its inquiry into Clinton's email practices while staying quiet about Trump.

A week before Election Day, the Clinton campaign has been trying to contain damage from FBI Director James Comey's announcement on Friday of new emails that might pertain to Clinton's use of a private server while secretary of state.

Trump seized on the revelation to intensify his criticism of a rival he has long dubbed "Crooked Hillary" and welcomed a slight improvement for him in a new ABC/Washington Post poll on Tuesday.

Clinton campaign manager Robby Mook questioned why the FBI's director had not released any information about its investigation into Russia's role in the election or ties to Trump and his senior aides.

"If you're in the business of releasing information about investigations on presidential candidates, release everything you have on Donald Trump. Release the information on his connections to the Russians," Mook said on CNN.

"They don't say a thing when it comes to Donald Trump and investigations against him, yet when it comes to Hillary Clinton, for some reason, they are more than happy to talk."

GETTY IMAGES

The FBI opened a preliminary inquiry into allegations that Trump or his associates might have had questionable dealings with Russian individuals or businesses, but found no evidence to warrant opening a full investigation, according to sources familiar with the matter.

The inquiry reviewed allegations that Trump or his associates might have engaged in contacts or commerce with individuals subject to U.S. or international financial sanctions or violated the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act.

U.S. intelligence agencies such as the Central Intelligence Agency and the National Security Agency, which generally are barred from investigating or spying on U.S. citizens, did not investigate Trump or his alleged dealings in Russia, according to three sources familiar with the matter.

The Office of the Director of National Intelligence and the Department of Homeland Security recently declared that they had concluded that the Russian government was trying to disrupt or discredit the U.S. presidential election and the broader U.S. political process by hacking into Democratic Party and Clinton campaign emails.

The United States has blamed Russia for cyber attacks on Democratic Party organizations.

Tesla, SolarCity shares fall ahead of merger details

GETTY IMAGES

Shares of Tesla Motors Inc. and SolarCity Corp. tumbled on Tuesday ahead of expected financial details from the electric carmaker on a pending $2.6 billion merger that has been met with widespread investor skepticism.

Shares of Tesla were down 4.1 percent in afternoon trading to $189.60 and shares of solar panel installer SolarCity were down 3.5 percent at $18.91.

Tesla was due to post additional information about the acquisition on its blog and website after the market close, followed by a question and answer webcast at 5 p.m.

Tesla Chief Executive Elon Musk, who is chairman of SolarCity and the largest shareholder in both companies, has described the deal as a "no brainer" that paves the way for a carbon-free energy and transportation company.

But many investors have not shared that opinion, and Tesla lost about $4.3 billion of its value with a share sell-off after the deal was first announced in June.

Shares of Tesla, as of Monday's close, are down 10 percent since the deal was made public.

SolarCity's board agreed to the deal in August. A vote by shareholders of both companies is planned for Nov. 17.

Tesla's offer, which represents about half of SolarCity's value a year ago, values SolarCity at $25.37 a share.

SolarCity, which has $6.34 billion in liabilities, including debt, has expanded dramatically in the last five years, but it relies heavily on borrowing money to finance its no-money-down residential solar installations.

The company's stock has fallen 63 percent so far in 2016.

Tesla itself has burned through over $600 million in cash in the first half of the year, and plans to increase spending this quarter in order to fund the launch of its mass-market Model 3 sedan, along with a massive battery factory in Nevada and other plans.

Colonial may open key US gasoline line by Saturday after fatal blast

Pump prices are unaffected even as gas futures rise by 15 percent.

Colonial Pipeline Co. said on Tuesday its main gasoline pipeline, a crucial supply source for the East Coast, could reopen as early as Saturday after an explosion in Alabama killed one worker and injured five others.

The blast on Monday occurred several miles from its biggest gasoline spill in nearly two decades in September that caused a 12-day interruption in the flow of about 1.3 million barrels per day of the fuel from the refining hub on the Gulf Coast to the Northeast.

The shutdown will restrict gasoline supplies to millions of Americans in the Southeast and possibly the Northeast. The Northeast could be less affected since it can get supplies via waterborne shippers.

U.S. gasoline futures soared 15 percent to the highest since June on the shutdown, but pared gains sharply to 4.6 percent to settle at $1.4841 per gallon after Colonial said it could reopen the pipe by the weekend.

Colonial said it would explore potential options to operate parts of its gasoline pipe, called Line 1, and would evaluate shipping gasoline on the distillates pipe, Line 2, which was briefly shut overnight by the incident.

During the September outage, the company shipped some gasoline on the line that usually transports diesel and jet fuels.

"If they are properly motivated, they can do the investigation and get the line up a lot quicker than the last one," said Richard Kuprewicz, president of Accufacts Inc., a pipeline advisory firm, referring to the September outage.

"My experience tells me that even with a fatality, I would not expect this to go as long as the last one."

Shippers using the East Coast supply artery were, however, bracing for a longer shutdown as Colonial said it was hard to predict a repair schedule.

Shippers and fuel companies were scrambling to secure supplies via sea or other alternatives to get fuel to the East Coast. Fuel retailers and consumers are likely to be most affected, though prices at the pump have not risen yet, even as gasoline futures have spiked.

North Carolina Gov. Pat McCrory said in a news conference the state gets 70 percent of its gasoline from the Colonial Pipeline and that he was exploring options for an extended outage.

North Carolina is one of several states that relaxed environmental and transportation rules for gasoline during the September outage.

Fatality could complicate restart

One person was killed and five others hospitalized in the incident that occurred when a nine-man crew working on the line in Shelby County hit Line 1 with a large excavator known as a track hoe, Colonial said.

A spokesperson for the U.S. Pipeline and Hazardous Materials Safety Administration (PHMSA) said investigators were on the scene. They noted that contractors were "reportedly" working on repairs on Line 1 related to the Sept. 9 spill.

Colonial did not respond to questions about whether the crew was working to restart the section of the gasoline line damaged by the September leak.

Brigham McCown, who headed up PHMSA for two years under George W. Bush, said the fatality could complicate restart efforts in upcoming days as multiple state and federal agencies investigate the incident. However, he said the details of how the rupture occurred may help speed the timeline.

"It's important to get out there, get on site, figure out who had what equipment where and who was giving what orders," said McCown.

The explosion took place in an unincorporated wildlife area outside Helena, Alabama. Colonial and the state's forestry commission were leading the response.

The 5,500-mile Colonial Pipeline is the largest U.S. refined products pipeline system and can carry more than 3 million barrels of gasoline, diesel and jet fuel between the U.S. Gulf Coast to the New York Harbor area.

Ryan Chandler, vice president at Colonial Group Inc., which is not connected to Colonial Pipeline, said he has been fielding calls from the pipeline's customers seeking access to its Charleston, South Carolina, and Savannah, Georgia, marine terminals.

Heidi Klum needs $16M loft to prep for Halloween

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Heidi Klum, with more than a dozen Halloween parties under her belt, has become just as famous for the annual bash as her modeling career.

The "Project Runway" host tries to outdo herself each year with a more outrageous costume. For this year's party, held in New York City, she brought a whole entourage — five clones to be exact — that popped out of a "Made in Germany" box on the red carpet.

Klum's 17th annual Halloween Party was held Oct. 31 at Vandal New York and reportedly included celebrity guests such as Neil Patrick Harris, Nick Cannon, Liev Schreiber, Serena Williams, Gabrielle Union, Trevor Noah, Ice-T and Coco, Kyle Mooney, Taryn Manning, Alan Cumming, Terrence Jenkins and Christian Siriano.

But before the star-studded event, the supermodel required a special "hideaway" to get ready for the event, according to Douglas Elliman. Acquired through the real estate agency and Booking.com, Klum prepped in a three-bedroom penthouse in the Soho Gallery Building with panoramic views of the Manhattan skyline.

The apartment, located at 94 Thompson St., is currently on the market for $16 million, and stretches across three floors with 3,500 square feet of interior space and 2,200 square feet of exterior landscaped terrace space. CRISTABELLE TUMOLA

Zayn Malik opens up about eating disorder in new memoir

It's not very often that we hear guys talk about body image and struggles with food and eating. But that doesn't mean they aren't affected by the same issues their gal pals are. Former One Direction member, and current boyfriend of supermodel Gigi Hadid, Zayn Malik opened up about his eating disorder in his new memoir, "Zayn," Perez Hilton reports. The 23-year-old, who has spoken publicly about his issues with anxiety, reflected on his One Direction days where he lost unhealthy amounts of weight.

"I didn't feel like I had control over anything else in my life, but food was something I could control, so I did … I had lost so much weight I had become ill," he says in the book. "The workload and the pace of life on the road put together with the pressures and strains of everything going on within the band had badly affected my eating habits."

Kim Kardashian returns to social media, kinda

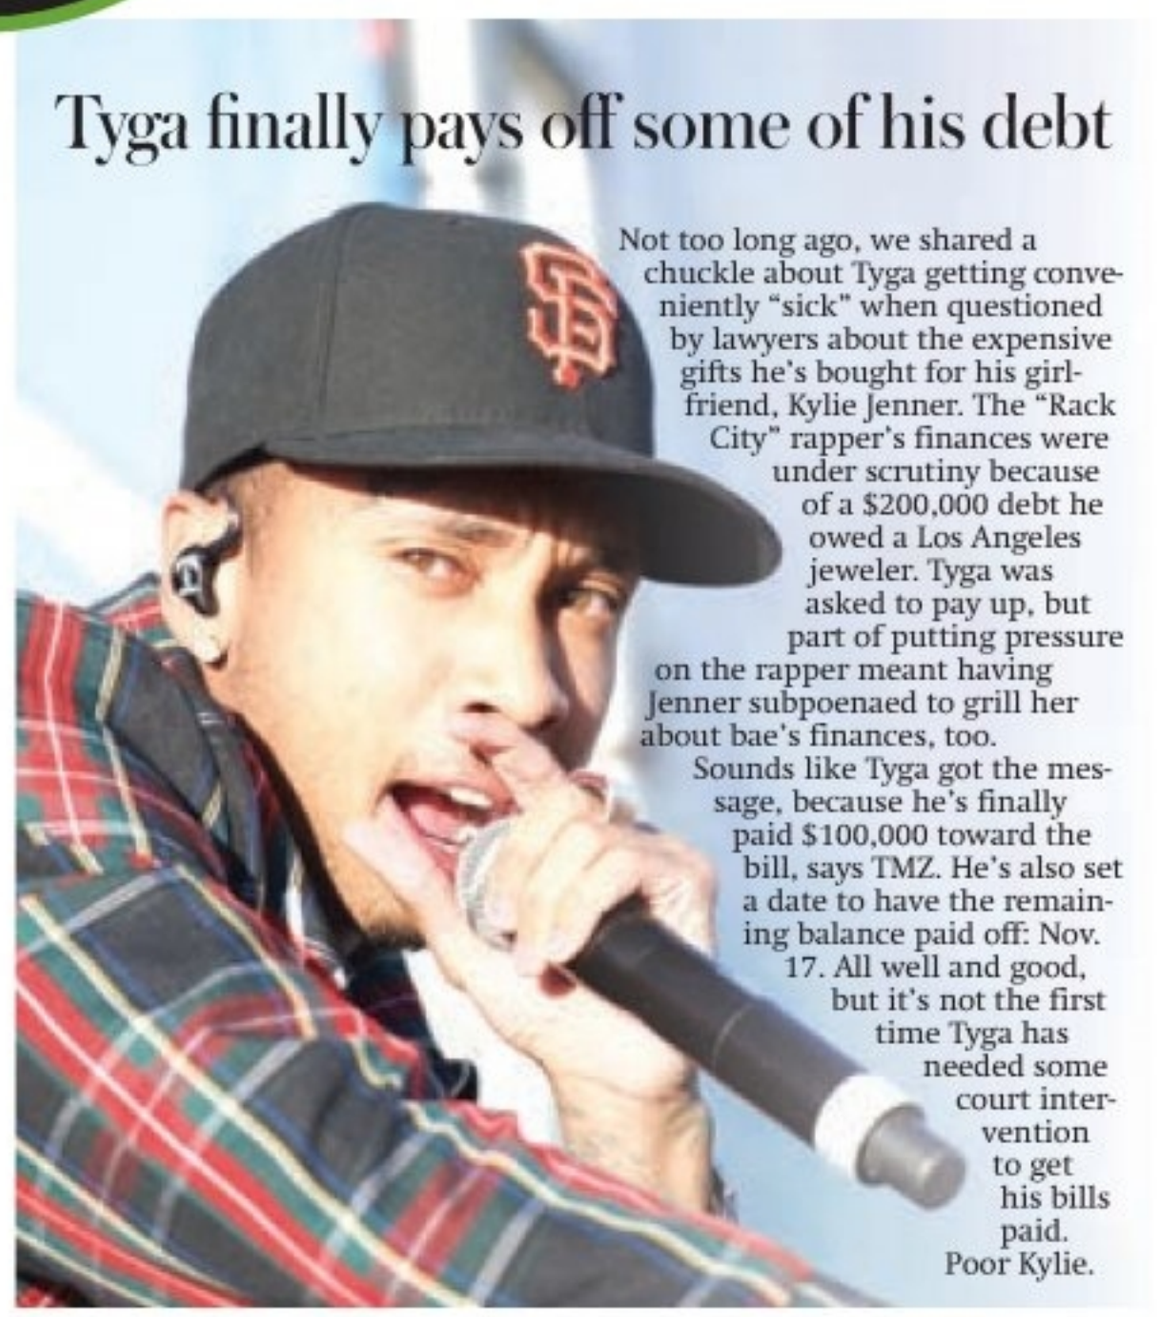
If you put money on Kim Kardashian not being able to stay off social media for a whole month, you're in luck — sort of.

Just three days shy of a month since her armed robbery in Paris, Kim updated her Facebook page with three new posts, reports People.

But they were vague at best. Two of the posts were links to content created by her sister Kourtney and her assistant, Stephanie Sheppard. The third post was a picture of Kim relaxing in a chair on her iPhone, with her Blackberry in her lap — the same Blackberry she publicly mourned in August. If you're following, this means it was an old picture; it's also since been deleted. So there's room for debate as to whether or not Kim was actually "on" social media.

Regardless, any activity will get the tails of us on #KimKWatch2016 wagging. Keep the faith, squad.

Tyga finally pays off some of his debt



Not too long ago, we shared a chuckle about Tyga getting conveniently "sick" when questioned by lawyers about the expensive gifts he's bought for his girlfriend, Kylie Jenner. The "Rack City" rapper's finances were under scrutiny because of a $200,000 debt he owed a Los Angeles jeweler. Tyga was asked to pay up, but part of putting pressure on the rapper meant having Jenner subpoenaed to grill her about bae's finances, too.

Sounds like Tyga got the message, because he's finally paid $100,000 toward the bill, says TMZ. He's also set a date to have the remaining balance paid off: Nov. 17. All well and good, but it's not the first time Tyga has needed some court intervention to get his bills paid.

Poor Kylie.

Michael Moore: Don't start celebrating yet

The filmmaker talks "Michael Moore in Trumpland" and still being afraid of election night.

MATT PRIGGE
matt.prigge@metro.us

Michael Moore has already voted. He sent in his absentee ballot the other day. No guess who he voted for. But a Trump presidency is still something that scares him. Moore is so worried that he released an eleventh-hour movie, "Michael Moore in Trumpland," now in select theaters and on iTunes. It's not your typical Moore documentary; it simply shows a live performance he gave in Wilmington, Ohio — a one-man show about the election he delivered to a crowd of mostly Trump supporters.

GETTY IMAGES

I was feeling pretty good about the election after the debates, but not so much after the email scandal Friday.

I've been nervous even before this. This only makes it worse. I live in Michigan, in what I call one of the "Brexit states." The polling we woke up to the morning of the primary back in March showed Hillary trouncing Bernie from anywhere from 15 to 30 points. Twelve hours later she lost to Bernie. Every poll was wrong.

Do you feel the emails will have as much of an impact on the polls as some are claiming?

I don't think it will change a single vote. I do believe two things. I believe for people who were planning on not voting, that might have been the last straw, and now they're going to vote for Trump. The other group I'm worried about is the Hillary voter. Ten percent of her vote got depressed over the weekend. That means they're going to vote for her but not enthusiastically. Which means they're not going to bring anyone to the polls with them. That's harmful. Everybody should be scared s—less about this and keep working for the next six days.

In "Michael Moore in Trumpland," in select theaters and now on iTunes, the filmmaker/political provocateur does a one-man show in Trump-supporting Wilmington, Ohio. GETTY IMAGES

I'm also concerned about the undecided voters who were going to vote.

I'm more concerned about Bernie voters, which I'm one of. They're still angry. I say to them, "What are you angry about? We got a socialist elected to the primaries in 22 states! [Hillary's] adopted two-thirds of his platform! That never happens! If the Democrats get the Senate back, guess who's the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee? Bernie Sanders, the socialist, is going to be in charge of the budget! Why are you angry?" Bernie voters should be taking a bow, going into the booth, voting for the first woman ever to be nominated in this country as president of the United States. And the next day we should be busy keeping the Bernie revolution going, supporting her in the good things she does and challenging her when she doesn't do them.

Even if Trump loses, I'm afraid he's awoken a part of the country that won't go away.

They will go away. Just like the segregationists went away. When I was young, people were saying, "The people who use the n-word all the time will never go away." How often do you hear the n-word nowadays? Those people do go away. The haters lose. Haters always lose. They win for a while, and then they don't.

"Gilmore Girls: A Year in the Life" premieres on Netflix on Nov. 25 NETFLIX

How to get ready for 'Gilmore Girls: A Year in the Life'

Your countdown to the hotly anticipated Nov. 25 revival.

KATE MOONEY
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

We're three weeks and two days away from the "Gilmore Girls" revival, and the frenzy keeps building. In the weeks leading up to Netflix's four-part "A Year in the Life" on Nov. 25, we've seen Luke's Diner takeovers across the country, "Gilmore Girls"-themed contests and gimmicks galore. Since the trailer was released last week, the internet is teeming with theories about what the heck's going on, with varying degrees of plausibility (we really doubt Kirk's at Friday Night Dinner because he's dating one of the Gilmore ladies, as David Stanley suggested over at GilmoreNews.com). And, yes, in case you didn't know, there really is a GilmoreNews.com.

Besides bingeing on all seven seasons available on Netflix, setting up a Google alert for "Gilmore Girls" (which we may or may not have done) so as not to miss one iota of internet chatter, and having overcaffeinated arguments with your friends about #TeamJess vs #TeamLogan vs. #TeamDean (#TeamNoneofThem is the winner), there are plenty of fun ways to immerse yourself in the land of Stars Hollow ahead of the comeback. Here are a few ideas we came up.

Listen to the Gilmore Guys podcast

If you're out on the road (or riding the train) feeling lonely in your love for "Gilmore Girls," all you have to do is put on an episode of the Gilmore Guys and ... you'll find instant companionship. Gilmore Guys are two dudes, longtime "GG" fan Kevin T. Porter and relative newcomer Demi Adejuyigbe, who are both writers and comedians, discussing each episode in length, plus recurring segments such as "Pop, goes the culture" in which they play back a supercut of each pop culture reference in the episode, or their "Fa fa fa fa" fashion report, in which they dish on what everybody was wearing. Pick a favorite episode to rehash through their voices, or tune in for a "Gilmore Gab," a talk with cast members and writers of the show, such as Scott Patterson (Luke) and Kelly Bishop(!), who plays matriarch Emily Gilmore. Oh, and there's plenty of singing, of the show's theme song "Where You Lead" and random tunes (R. Kelly's "I Believe I Can Fly," for example) that somehow doesn't get annoying.

Attendees at the Gilmore Girls Fan Fest in Washington Depot, Connecticut, braved the rain for a chance to experience "real-life" Stars Hollow for a weekend. CHELA CRINNION

Eat like a Gilmore

Whether you're hosting a watch party or a bespoke version of a Luke's Diner takeover, let this cookbook be your guide. Writer and chef Kristi Carlson's "Eat like a Gilmore" is a Kickstarter success story: It includes 100 recipes either eaten, served or mentioned on the show. As she writes in the intro, "To eat the way Lorelai and Rory eat at home, all you need is a drawer full of takeout menus, a magnet on the fridge with the number for the pizza place and a convenience store down the street." True. But, if you want to throw your own Friday Night Dinner, you'll find a recipe for Emily's tried-and-true salmon puffs, or a meal of roasted squab, written to seem as easy as sauteing a chicken breast. Shout-outs to Sookie St. James include her iconic risotto and to-die-for peach sauce that she literally bled over in the pilot.

Make your own pilgrimage to real-life Stars Hollow

OK, so you probably missed that Gilmore Girls Fan Fest weekend, aka, the stuff that Gilmore fans' dreams are made of. (Anyway, we hear it rained.) You still have three weekends ahead of you until the revival, and then, really, your whole lifetime, to curate your own Stars Hollow getaway! Priceline.com is offering deals on car rentals and hotels in Washington Depot, Connecticut, and neighboring towns Guilford, New Milford and Litchfield. Understandably, a night at The Mayflower Grace, on which show creator Amy Sherman-Palladino based The Independence Inn, is a bit steep (from $675/night) but you can find charming, affordable alternatives like the Litchfield Inn (from $109). Once you're there, you can plan a whole itinerary of stop-offs at local haunts that evoke the show, such as Theo's Downtown Diner (Luke's Diner vibes) in New Milford, and Bradford House Antiques (Mrs. Kim's Antiques vibes) in Litchfield.

Read like Rory

Rory devours books like Lorelai downs cups of coffee. What better way to get hyped for "GG" than to coax out your inner book worm? The Gilmore Girls Book Club meets each month at Word Bookstore in Brooklyn's Greenpoint neighborhood as well as in Jersey City to discuss one of 339 books referenced in the show, (past picks include Zadie Smith's "On Beauty" and "Please Kill Me: The Uncensored Oral History of Punk" by Legs McNeil and Gillian McCain) with the exception of their next meeting, Dec. 4, at Word Greenpoint, which is more revival-focused. They will discuss Elena Ferrante's "My Brilliant Friend" because, in a recent promo video, Rory tells Michelle Obama she's hyped about reading the "Neapolitan novels."

If you can't make it to Jersey City or Brooklyn, you can always start your own book club, pulling from the aforementioned list of 339 titles, which is available on BuzzFeed. Now, brew a pot of coffee and get to it.

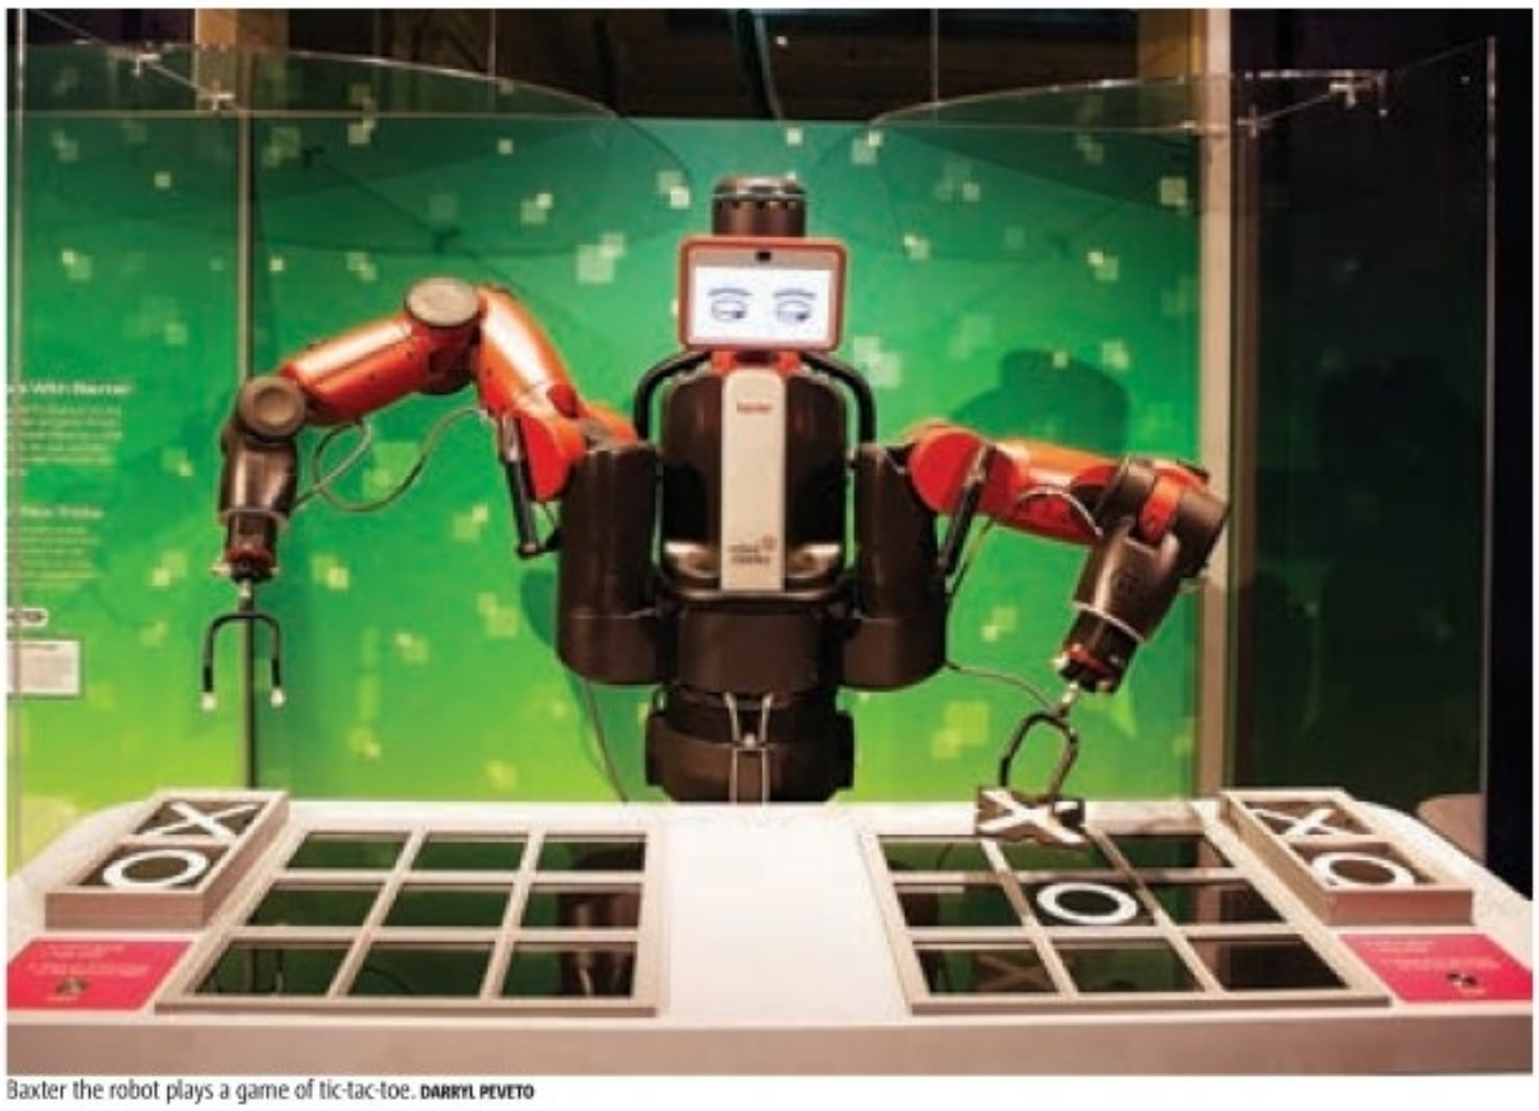
Robot Revolution rolls into The Franklin Institute



Baxter the robot plays a game of tic-tac-toe. DARRYL PEVETO

The robots are coming! The robots are coming!

KYLE HILLER
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

The future isn't coming. It's already here, and it has arrived at Philadelphia's Franklin Institute with the Robot Revolution exhibit. The visionary collection features a wide assortment of robots, curated from universities and global robotics companies. Many of them are available for interaction with the museum's guests. This all comes bearing innovation in an imperative fashion: the helping hand.

The future of robotics will be one that integrates assistance and aid in numerous ways. The exhibit claims that, according to the Franklin Institute's website, "from self-driving cars to surgical assistance, from scientific research to search and rescue missions — robots are here to help ease and improve our lives." How that is happening may not be so clear in the popular eye, which makes this an important exhibition.

Pop culture, from film and television to literature, has often portrayed the advent of robotics in human culture as a negative one. The Robot Revolution exhibit quickly dispels archaic conspiracy theories or scare tactics. Robots are here to help.

EMYS MIMICS FACES AND EXPRESSIONS. DARRYL PEVETO

Move all the silly misconceptions aside. Robot Revolution is a hands-on experience of how robotics has become a vital asset into humanity, with an inside look at how it will manifest its helping hand in the near future.

The exhibit is sorted into four areas: skills, smarts, cooperation and locomotion. Visitors can see the Robotis-OP, a robot that uses face-tracking software to sense when you're looking at it and can recognize and interact with other objects — like kicking a soccer ball. Similarly, there's EMYS, a robot that can express emotions through its Facial Action Coding System. Paro is a baby seal robot that uses touch therapy to help medical patients heal and recover physically and emotionally. LiDAR is a robot that contains sensors that work with a car and allows it to "see" the physical world and assist in driving. Baxter plays tic-tac-toe with its human opponents. There's also Maneuver Rhex, the all-terrain crawling robot, developed locally at the University of Pennsylvania.

With 40 robotics to check out at the exhibit, the revolution is a helpful one. Visitors will get to experience how to learn, interact and play along with robots.

The exhibit runs through to April 2. Cost of admission varies between $25-$30 during daytime visits, and $15-$20 for weekend evening visits (Thursday-Saturday) for children and adults. Find out more about the exhibit by visiting the Franklin Institute's website at fi.edu.

Kenzo x H&M hits stores this week

This season's most anticipated designer collaboration is finally here.

TINA CHADHA

Forget plain, dark hues — your fall wardrobe is about to get a maximalist makeover.

On Thursday, shoppers can finally get their hands on the print-tastic Kenzo & H&M collection in stores and online. For their collab with the Swedish retail giant, Kenzo creative directors Humberto Leon and Carol Lim — known for their bold prints and lux streetwear — looked to the past.

The designers wanted to honor the legacy of designer Kenzo Takada, the free spirit who broke down barriers in the late 1960s as the first Asian designer in the exclusive Paris fashion scene. So for the first time since taking the helm of the French fashion house, the duo dipped into the brand's archives.

The results are mix of dazzling, in-your-face prints and patterns — tiger stripes, DayGlo colors, ethnic textiles, boho silhouettes, kimono jackets — that will keep you looking far from basic. Here are some of our favorites from the line.

Inside Look: A charming $1.6 million mansion at Morris Arboretum

ALEXIS SACHDEV

Tucked away in Chestnut Hill, nestled among the trees on a quaint cobblestone street, there's a charming stone-clad mansion. The perfect respite from the hubbub of city life, this French-style home, designed by architect George W. Carson, features original details from 1926, but has been updated with all the necessary modern amenities.

Located on Meadowbrook Avenue, this five-bedroom, three-bathroom home adjacent to the Morris Arboretum was listed last week for $1,575,000.

Enter through the rounded cottage-style front door into a spacious living room, filled with original cherrywood flooring and a stunning stone fireplace. Make your way into a sun-drenched dining room adjacent to a chef's dream kitchen, decked out with marble countertops, cherrywood custom cabinetry, high-end appliances and a built-in espresso maker.

A fantastic feature in this house is the library and sunroom on the first floor, tucked away in the home's original rooms. Pass through rounded archways into these stone-clad rooms and look out over the house's side yard, read the morning news or just relax for an afternoon. Or head outside, and kick back under the awning-covered patio overlooking the rest of the property.

The second and third floors are filled with spacious bedrooms and multiuse rooms that can be converted to offices or play rooms. The master suite features an en-suite walk-in closet, Calcutta marble filling the bathroom, a free-standing tub and lots of natural light.

It might feel like a far-away home tucked away in the woods, but this property is incredibly accessible to the rest of charming Chestnut Hill and its boutique shops, gourmet restaurants and family-friendly entertainment. Plus, the owner of 9489 Meadowbrook is entitled to their own personal key to the Morris Arboretum.

Be swept away with stone walls and a breathtaking view.

This sunny bedroom is elegant yet simple.

Frame your world

Framebridge makes fancying up your walls easier than ever.

TINA CHADHA
@TinaatMetro
tina.chadha@metro.us

We all have that pile: special photos, prints and mementos we've been meaning to frame for years but can never manage to find the time. But thanks to Framebridge, you can soon have the gallery walls of your Pinterest dreams.

The design service takes the anxiety — and huge price tag — out of custom framing. The process is simple: You upload a digital file or mail in your piece of art (Framebridge takes care of the shipping cost) and chose one of the service's superchic frames. It will custom frame your work and ship it back a few days later. The best part: All the frames are under $160.

Before we go on a framing bender (did we mention it's $39 to frame an image from your Instagram?), we checked in with Creative Director Tessa Wolf to talk tips and trends.

Tessa Wolf's cheat sheet

Go for a no-fail black: "A black frame with a white mat looks amazing with anything you want to look editorial and clean. And it will look good in any setting."

Show off its age: "When you're framing an item and you want to show off the edges, we recommend float mounting — which means the work floats above a mat board — and really shows off all of the aging and detailing, like with an old map or postcard. I think float mounting against a white mat in a white frame or in a natural-wood frame looks really sophisticated."

Pair quirkier pieces of art with really regal frames: "It's one of my favorite ways to frame something. If you have a really modern piece of art like a black-and-white abstract, to put it in a very classic metallic frame just looks awesome. This also allows you to put it anywhere and it gets a lot of attention."

LEIGH WILLIAMS

Trends in framing

The experts at Framebridge live and breathe gallery walls, and are quick to spot trends as they're born. "We're seeing a lot of grid gallery walls," says Wolf. For this technique, you frame, say, nine photos or pieces of art that are exactly the same size and arrange them in a perfect grid. "It just has a ton of impact above a big piece of furniture or an empty wall," she says.

If you're a risk-taker, take your cues from the design world's obsession du jour: black walls. "Everyone has had white walls forever, and white framing for a long time was superpopular," Wolf says. "But now that we're seeing black walls, we're seeing people use black frames with black mats in the same way that people were using white with white. I just love the look of anything on a black wall."

NFL power rankings | by Luke Miller

No. 1

Patriots (7-1)

The Patriots celebrated their revenge beatdown of the Bills by sending Jamie Collins to the Browns for a draft pick. Apparently you can afford to look to the future when you open up a three-game lead between yourself and the rest of the division in Week 8.

No. 2

Cowboys (6-1)

Sean Lee was a one-man wrecking ball for the Dallas defense on a night where the Cowboys needed every play they could get. This wasn't the Cowboys' most impressive night, but their résumé is padding out, and they've now got a two game lead over the rest of the division.

No. 3

Broncos (6-2)

Even though Wade Phillips was taken to the hospital following a sideline collision or, to use Phillips' words: "I got run over," this defense still didn't hesitate to score seven points of their own and intercept Philip Rivers three times. Rivers had only thrown four picks in the previous seven games this season.

No. 4

Chiefs (5-2)

After a rough day for Alex Smith — checked for a concussion twice and diagnosed with one once — the Chiefs can't feel in terrible hands with Nick Foles. With the Colts focusing on the run the Chiefs had their best passing day of the season no matter who was at quarterback.

No. 5

Raiders (6-2)

Somehow, trapped inside a game in which the Raiders outgained Tampa by almost 400 yards, Derek Carr threw for a team-record 513 yards, and they came from behind twice to win in overtime, were 23 penalties for 200 yards. Clean that up, Raiders. The AFC West doesn't look to be easy pickings.

No. 6

Vikings (5-2)

Make that two straight poor performances and some very unnerving problems along the offensive line for Minnesota, which has let 11 sacks of Sam Bradford endanger their most promising season in years. They'll be relying on Bradford, who they spent a first-round pick on this offseason.

No. 7

Seahawks (4-2-1)

Russell Wilson has gone three straight games without a touchdown pass, his last one coming in Week 4. By the time the Seahawks take the field again, it will have been a month since his last pass found the end zone. They need to find a way to score when their offense is on the field.

No. 8

Falcons (5-3)

Despite a couple losses, the Falcons look to be in the game to stay this season, unlike a year ago, when their first loss led to a shocking streak that unraveled the season. Averaging four points more per game than any other team in the NFL, they are licking their chops to face Tampa on Thursday.

No. 9

Eagles (4-3)

The Eagles were unable to make a move for a wide receiver before Tuesday's trade deadline. If help isn't going to come from abroad it needs to start showing up from within. No Eagles receiver has had a 100-yard game since Jordan Matthews did it in the opener against Cleveland.

No. 10

Steelers (4-3)

The Steelers leave their bye still with the most wins in the AFC North, thanks to the Bengals overtime tie in London. Now Ben Roethlisberger and maybe even Ladarius Green are back. Which is good, because the offense was exactly what needed help.

Best of the rest

11 — Packers (4-3)
12 — Bills (4-4)
13 — Texans (5-3)
14 — Cardinals (3-4-1)
15 — Chargers (3-5)
16 — Lions (4-4)
17 — Washington (4-3-1)
18 — Bengals (3-4-1)
19 —Giants (4-3)
20 — Dolphins (3-4)
21 — Saints (3-4)
22 —Colts (4-4)
23 — Titans (4-4)
24 — Panthers (2-5)

Eagles' offense troublingly unproductive

{The Eagles' offense ranks near the bottom in nearly every statistical category. GETTY IMAGES

A simple look at the Eagles numbers on offense is enough to make even the most optimistic fan weary of the team's playoff chances.

Whether it's approach, scheme or personnel, something needs to change for the Eagles to remain competitive in the NFC East, after falling to 0-2 in the division and 4-3 overall last week. The defense can't do everything, can it?

The Eagles passing attack — if you can even call it that — has yielded the third fewest yards through the air, just one yard more than the Bills who rank 30th of 32 teams.

Their 1,526 yards are broken down into an average of just 10.2 yards per completion, or the fourth worst average in the NFL.

Offensively as a whole, Philly has the fourth least productive unit in football in terms of total yards gained, and has compiled an anemic 256 yards per game over their last three contests.

"Obviously, we're going to attack the game based on what the defense is giving us and utilize it that way," Doug Pederson said. "Some of it can fall on the quarterback, obviously, because he ultimately has the final say in all the decisions. Then just personnel and just understanding the design of the play."

Carson Wentz, after bursting on the scene has been less and less dynamic, posting 202 yards or less over the last three weeks.

If broken down further, the Eagles average just 5.3 yards per play — 26th in the NFL and more than a yard and a half less per play than the Falcons who lead the league.

"We have to figure out and find ways to get the ball, obviously, down the field," Pederson said.

The Eagles have gained more than 30 yards in a play just once over the last four games.

"You have to trust protection," the coach said. "You have to trust reads and progressions and you've got to trust the guys to get down the field. So, there's a lot involved in that kind of stuff. We just have to evaluate it."

The team did not make a move at Tuesday's trade deadline, though they did offer a fifth-rounder for San Francisco's Torrey Smith, reports say.

NHL ROOKIE DIARY: KONECNY JOINS FLYERS' TOP LINE, SCORES FIRST GOAL

Keeping up with Konecny

By Kyle Phillippi

Travis Konecny walked through the players' entry door at the Wells Fargo Center a little more than an hour before their morning skate. He walked down the hall toward the players' room and started to get prepared as he would any other time.

Then head coach Dave Hakstol approached him with that game's lineup.

"We're moving you up to the top line," Hakstol told his 19-year-old forward.

Here he was, just seven NHL games under his belt, being told he was going to be paired with Claude Giroux and Jake Voracek.

"It was definitely really cool," Konecny said. "I'm obviously still in the stage where I'm like 'Oh God, it's Giroux and Voracek.' Any line you're going to play on in the NHL, you're going to be playing with good players. I just have to relax and be confident in my game and now be so starstruck all the time."

That turned out to be the second of a few different "first moments" for Konecny that week.

Prior to his promotion — which lasted just a few days until Brayden Schenn regained his top line form — Konecny picked up a goal that every player remembers: his first.

With his team down 3-0 with momentum fully on Buffalo's side, Konecny stepped in front of an Ivan Provorov shot that found his blade, redirecting below the goalie's glove. It turned out that impressive goal sparked the Flyers three-goal rally and eventual shootout victory for the full two points.

Lost in the excitement of his first goal — a moment he says is right up there with any other achievement he's had — was just how impressive of a score it was. Deflections are something Konecny has really spent a lot of hours working on.

"In junior hockey I wasn't much of a "deflect in the crease" kind of guy, but I realized at this level a lot of times if you're going to score goals you have to be in front of the net," Konecny said.

During his postgame interview, Konecny let out a smirk when saying his mom would probably be crying on the phone when he called her afterward. About an hour or so after the media cleared out, Konecny made that phone call.

There were a lot "we're so proud of you" and "keep going" comments throughout that conversation.

"They made sure to keep my head in the right spot," Konecny said. "That's what parents are for."

As for where he'll store that puck, the rookie says it will "probably just sit in my room."

After all, that memory will always be stored in his head, mostly because of how important that score proved to be but also because the image of him smiling, posing with the puck in his right hand seems to be everywhere on the internet.

"It's been all over my social media, so it's been on my mind constantly," Konecny said with a laugh.

First goal? Check.

Playing on the first line? Check.

How about playing in his first Flyers-Penguins rivalry game? Check.

This past week sure was one he'll never forget.

Aries Dealing with institutions will be difficult. An unexpected offer will come from an unusual source. Don't overreact, overspend or give in to indulgent tendencies.

Taurus Be careful when dealing with volunteer groups or people looking for handouts. Your time, money and effort are best used for personal gains, not for helping others.

Gemini You'll be drawn to someone who may take advantage of you. Don't let your emotions take charge and cost you a promotion. Don't mix business with pleasure.

Cancer An unusual offer will tempt you. Reach out to someone you've collaborated with in the past and you will be given more options. Focus on a creative endeavor.

Leo You need to double-check important papers or your financial status. An unexpected development will lead to questions. Personal improvements will boost your ego.

Virgo Complications will surface between you and a member of your family. Use your intelligence and read between the lines in order to get to the root of the problem.

Libra Plan a get-together with friends or someone from your past whom you can't stop thinking about. The information you receive today will have an emotional impact on you.

Scorpio Think outside the box and jump at the chance to use your skills in new ways. A creative approach to whatever you do will lead to recognition and rewards.

Sagittarius Emotional issues will make you transparent. If there is something you want to keep secret, don't share it with anyone, including your closest confidantes.

Capricorn You'll find it difficult to determine what other people are going to do next. Your best option is to stay focused on taking care of your responsibilities.

Aquarius It's a good day to update personal papers, sign contracts or hash out agreements. A physical change will lead to compliments. Romance is highlighted.

Pisces You'll have trouble getting to the bottom of a personal matter. Ulterior motives are apparent. Ask pointed questions to avoid being misled or misinterpreted. EUGENIA LAST
